And the best part is that after this, your password has been changed to "Titanium" and all your data has been safely encrypted with 256-bit AES technology. Ok - everything that I have said above is indeed a bit of a short term solution but the non-daily use of a strong password is the only long-term measure that will really guarantee that you are safe from possible future attacks. The other thing that should be done is to protect your PC with a regular security suite and ensure that automatic updates are turned on and installed as soon as they are available. There are many more things that you can do to further secure your PC, but as I am sure you know some of this already, those are the ones that have been most important to me personally in the recent past and I hope that it will do the trick for you also. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to ask!

Regards, Martin My Results Hello, I think I made a change to my password that I didn't set up with a strong password. I read the last message from you and tried the commands you gave me. However, I made a change and now can't restore it. Thanks, Rik My Response Hello Rik, I am sorry to hear that you have locked yourself out of the "Titanium" protected area. First of all, we would like to examine your PC to see how we can get you "unlocked" so that you can start with the tasks that you need to complete to regain full access to your PC. A first thing that you may want to do is to follow the steps that we have included in this message, which will help you to safely remove the "Titanium" protection on your PC. You will then be able to get back to your 82138339de
